Adventures in the Arts

It is a vital responsibility of the recreation profession to provide the maximum number of opportunities for the individual to enrich his leisure time. In fulfillment of this responsibility The National Recreation and Park Association, The National Therapeutic Recreation Society, and The National Institute of Education, Waterford, Connecticut, have developed "ADVENTURES IN THE ARTS."

"Adventures in the Arts" is a superbly written unit of information designed for the rapid and comprehensive understanding of our potentially stimulating subjects: literature, music, painting, architecture and sculpture. The material consists of 12 portfolios for the patient's or client's use. A reference section with dozens of full-color art reproductions is included with the 12 portfolios and comes in a highly durable and washable gold-imprinted binder. The binder has tabbed sections for easy reference, as well as study.

The value of "Adventures in the Arts" lies in its many uses and appropriateness of purpose to the varied program needs of the professional recreator in all settings. You, who are most concerned with the leisure-time pursuits of ill, disabled and disadvantaged individuals, will find here a new and highly effective resource, reference and teaching tool. Others will find that "Adventures in the Arts" can be used as an educational tool as well as an aid to developing or strengthening efforts of the practitioner to develop or strengthen interest and involvement in the cultural arts. This program of systematic learning contains material that is simple to understand and avoids philosophical text. Exposure to this constructive program can be of great value, whether it is used to augment already existing programs or becomes a program in itself.

We are now able to offer "Adventures in the Arts" at a very special price. Several of these sets placed within easy reach of all patients or clients can educate and entertain at the highest level. All the subjects covered are valuable for use by therapists, special activity coordinators, community recreation leaders, and fit easily into all types of institution and agency recreation programs.

This publication can be purchased through the NRPA Book Center at the cost of $11.80.
